

Acid Attack product of 2013 Amendment :

A critical study and observation in SAARC countries

ABSTRACT

Naman Shukla¹

Krishna Pandey²

During the most recent decade, India has been seeing a disturbing development of acid attack, particularly on women. Acid brutality is a horrifying wrongdoing submitted generally against women, with an aim to distort or execute her. It can likewise be known as the sexual orientation-based savagery against women. As indicated by the National Commission of India Acid Attack is "a demonstration of tossing corrosive or utilizing corrosive in any shape on the casualty with the goal of or with the information that such a man is probably going to cause to the next individual perpetual or incomplete harm or distortion or disfiguration to any piece of the group of such individual". Young women are biting the dust or deformed each day because of acid attack. Young women have lost their lives while numerous are battling with wounds who have survived these awful assaults by frustrated sweethearts by those looking for vindicating against another family by desirous associates. This paper focuses on how the 2013 amendment have changed the course of direction. This paper also focuses on the situation prevailing in the neighboring countries to India i.e. SAARC. The paper shall be based on the review of various literature on the concerned subject matter.

¹ LL.B. (fifth year), Fairfield Institute of Management and Technology- School of Law, New Delhi
² LL.B. (fifth year), Fairfield Institute of Management and Technology- School of Law, New Delhi